Tips for Organizing Digital Photos - Part 1

If you've recently moved from film to digital photography, it's likely you noticed that organizing photos isn't what it used to be. What if you knew that spending a little time now would save you tons of time in the future, plus help you and those you love get more from your personal photos?

Keeping Track

In the old days, stacking shoeboxes full of photos in your closet was a reasonably acceptable organizational strategy, albeit somewhat crude and the product of benign neglect. To find the oldest photos, you would simply dig down and get the box on the bottom of the stack. And given you probably exposed a relatively small number of rolls of film each year, the task of browsing until you found what you wanted might take only a few minutes.

Finding those same pictures in the digital age should be easier, right? On the contrary! If you haven't established some sort of filing system, it can prove to be a daunting challenge indeed. After all, with no film and processing involved, the cost per exposure has essentially gone to zero, so naturally you shoot many more photos. In no time at all, there you sit with hundreds, if not thousands, of photos piling up on your computer's hard drive, all of them named something like Img-9999.jpg.

Fortunately, modern operating systems like Apple's OS X and Windows XP help a little by providing thumbnails of your photos, but as the number of files on your computer grows larger and larger, even scanning through all of those thumbnails can become a very time-consuming chore.

Step One: Out with the Old

First and foremost, be ruthless! Delete, delete, delete! Keep only the photos that are truly worth keeping! This is possibly the single hardest thing for any photographer to do, especially if we're talking about photos of family and friends. That's when we all tend to become packrats.

But if you don't get into the habit of deleting those truly bad photos that we all take, you may be beaten before you even get started. After all, this is one of the big advantages to shooting digital in the first place-you can delete your mistakes!

Usually the photos you're certain you want to delete are pretty obvious. If they're too dark or too light to see what's in them, delete them! If little Nancy is nothing but a blur because either she or the camera was moving, move it to the trash folder! But you need to delete some of the less obvious ones, too. Do you really need that shot of Nancy with her eyes closed? How about the one that looks like an exact duplicate of the one taken before it? Which is better?

Step Two: Categorize

After you've culled down your photos to just those that you wish to keep, it's time to come up with meaningful categories that that fit with your life and the things you like to photograph. A simple list might be something like this:

- Family
- Friends
- Vacation
- Pets
- Work
- Hobbies
- Holidays
- Other

Tips for Organizing Digital Photos - Part 2
Last week we talked about how to get started organizing your digital photos. Now we're ready to get ruthless.

Step Three: Create Folders
Once you have your categories figured out, it's time to create folders using those categories for names, and to make them even more useful, include a sequential number or a creation date in the folder name-something like "Family001" or "Family2004-01-01." Then your folder names will be helpful much like the position of shoeboxes in your closet gave you an obvious clue where you would find your oldest photos.

Here's an important tip: Keep track of the size of your folders. Since you will want to copy your folders to a CD or a DVD disc for backup purposes, when your folder gets close to the maximum size of the disc you plan to use, it's time to back it up! Then once you've archived a "full" folder to a disc, create a new one for that category, i.e., "Family002" or "Family2004-02-01." Of course, while you're waiting for a folder to fill up, it's a good idea to do incremental backups to rewriteable discs.

Step Four: Rename Files Renaming camera files to something more meaningful can help, as well. "Img-9999.jpg" might be fine in the beginning, but at some point if you reset your camera and you end up with two files named "Img-9999.jpg," you're in trouble. Naming a file "Nancy-001.jpg" or "Nancy2004-02-01.jpg" can help you find all of the photos of Nancy using your computer operating system's search function. Or if it makes more sense to organize by date, you may want to use the date the photo was taken and sequential numbering. Then you would have a file name that looks like "2004-01-01-001.jpg" for the first photo taken on January 1, 2004.

Regardless of how you choose to name your folders and files, by all means, be consistent!

Last Step: Write it Down
Last, but not least, as you design your filing system, take time to write down in detail your method of organizing your photos. Besides helping you to be more consistent, the "roadmap" you create will be something others can follow to find photos in your collection. Then years from now if someone needs to decipher how you organized your photos, they'll be able to benefit from all of your hard work. To that end, be sure you save those instructions as a simple text file on all of the CDs and/or DVDs that contain your photos. You can do that by making a habit of always copying that file into every new image folder as soon as you create it.

Given how important your personal photos are to you and your family, isn't it time to stop with the excuses and get them organized? You know the job won't get any easier the longer you delay, so get started today! Once you do, you can begin to refine your workflow until doing the job right won't take much time at all. And particularly when you factor in all of the time wasted hunting through that one big digital shoebox-your computer-it's a safe bet you'll save time in the long run!

We'll provide more tips on software you'll want to consider in Software for Organizing Digital Photos.

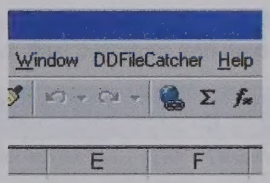
How to copy filenames from Windows Explorer to a Microsoft Excel Spreadsheet

To copy Windows Explorer files to Excel, launch DDFileCatcher from the menu in Excel, drag and drop any number of files onto DDFileCatcher which will convert the Windows files into text and send them back to the spreadsheet, where they are listed with filepaths and other information, if required, like file sizes and dates.

DDFileCatcher works with Excel to make filepath lists in several formats. It installs a file called an add-in in the Microsoft Excel startup folder. When Excel starts, it loads this file and inserts a menu, called "DDFileCatcher". The menu appears to the left of the "Help" menu.



Due to the way Windows works, we can't show you a screen shot of the menu open, but the menu options are as described here:

Full Filepaths Clicking "Full Filepaths" will launch DDFileCatcher and, after files have been dropped onto it from Windows Explorer, My Computer, or The Desktop, the files will be returned to Excel and will be listed as full filepaths with one per row. Rows are inserted for the filepaths, which means DDFileCatcher cannot overwrite existing information in the spreadsheet.

A typical full filepath is C:\Program Files\DDFileCatcher\ddfc20.exe

This is made up of the drive (C:), folder (\Program Files\DDFileCatcher\), the file name (ddfc20), and the extension (.exe).

Folders then Filenames Sometimes you might just want to list the filenames in a folder without including the full path for each file. The "folders then filenames" option puts file information in Microsoft Excel with the folder containing the files on a line followed by the filenames of the files in the folder on lines beneath it. For example:

C:\Program Files\DDFileCatcher\Help\
DDFileCatcher.cnt
DDFILECATCHER.HLP
DDFileCatcherExcelHelp.cnt

Files can be dropped onto DDFileCatcher for several folders, and the list printed in Excel will be in the form shown above.

With this option, sorting the rows would cause the information to lose its value, as you wouldn't know which file was in which folder. It is useful, though, for presentation purposes.

DDFileCatcher will also display the file extension, size and date created or modified. If the cursor is in a blank part of the spreadsheet, the columns put in the file information will be those set on DDFileCatcher when it is launched. If the cursor is in existing file information rows made by DDFileCatcher, when DDFileCatcher is launched, it will display the same columns as were in the Excel rows, and will add the new information at the end of the rows in the spreadsheet. It's actually easier to do it than explain.

Settings... To put headings above each column of file information, check the "First Row of Table has Headings" checkbox. The headings used can be the default English headings of "Filepath", "Extension", "Size" and "Date", or if the "Use Custom Headings" checkbox is checked, any text can be used for the headings, for example in another language. The headings, such as "Extension" will only appear if that column has been selected in DDFileCatcher for display (when DDFileCatcher is launched).

Putting the file path list into a database If you want to use the file path list into a database, for example, Microsoft Access, save the list on a worksheet by itself and import it into the database Spreadsheet, either as a "Link Table" or "Import Table". DDFileCatcher can also save file lists to disk files in a comma separated variable, (CSV), format, which can be imported into any database.

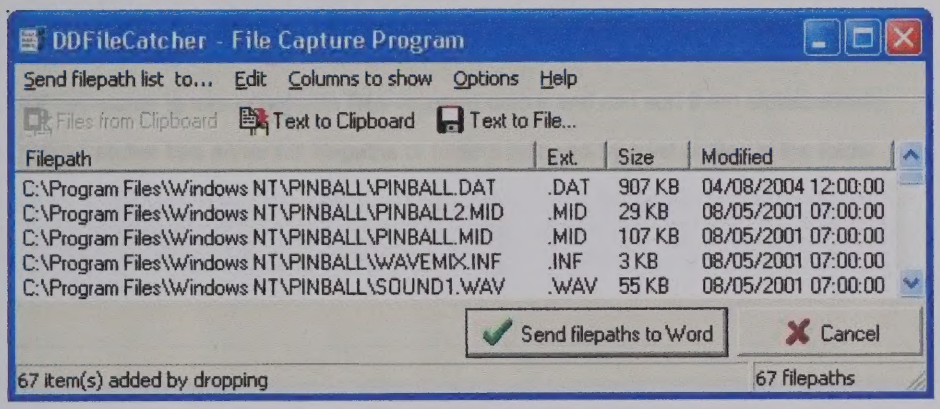
DDFileCatcher

File name copying made easy - turn Windows files into text

Need to make lists of files quickly and accurately?

- Copy file names and other information to the Clipboard and paste in any document
- Copy file names to Microsoft Word - click a menu in Word and list the files in a table
- Copy file names to Microsoft Excel - click a menu in Excel and list the files
- Copy file names for one file, all the files in a folder, or from several folders at once
- Copy file names to a text file
- Copy thousands of file names from searches in Windows Explorer - no need to learn a new program

Never misstype a filepath again. Accurately list files needed for your job. DDFileCatcher looks like this. Just drag and drop files onto DDFileCatcher to turn them into text.



Watch DDFileCatcher make a table in Word and fill it with file information.

DDFileCatcher is a user-friendly file listing utility used to copy file names from Windows Explorer as text. It can be launched from Microsoft Word or Excel and put the file paths in a Word table or Excel spreadsheet. As a stand-alone program, the file paths can be put in the Clipboard and pasted to anywhere you need them, such as an e-mail, a dialog or the source code of a computer program. Select files in a folder and drop or paste them onto DDFileCatcher as in this screenshot.

In conclusion DDFileCatcher has found a niche market that no one else has taken advantage of. The really good news is not that they have found this niche, but how much thought they have put into the program. The options are really well thought out, and DDFileCatcher is extremely easy to use. A Real Winner! Try It! Buy It! - Shareware Junkies 25-star review

Thanks! You are right, there are many, many utilities out there. It's just not easy to find simple, elegant and easy to use. DDFileCatcher is certainly one of the best. Regards, Alex

It really makes my data analysis work much easier when I have to copy a list of several hundred word documents over to another document. Sincerely, James

When you're writing a document, and you want to include one or more file paths for files or directories on a computer, it's time consuming and error prone to type them by hand. For example: "C:\Documents and Settings\Administrator\Start Menu\Programs\Internet Explorer.lnk". With DDFileCatcher, you just drag and drop them and turn them into text. Then click the "Text to Clipboard" button and the files can be pasted straight into any document or application.

- Copy file names from searches applying advanced filters in Windows Explorer
- Select which files you want to convert to file paths from anywhere on your computer
- Copy file search or print all the files in a folder - just drop onto DDFileCatcher, send them to Microsoft Word and print them out.
- Listing files in a directory - Select the files you want and drag them to DDFileCatcher. List files from multiple folders and put them in a report.
- Catch files, folders and shortcuts and turn them into text file paths.
- Automatically put file paths in a table in Microsoft Word or Excel or Notepad.
- Copy paths to the Clipboard and paste into documents.computer code, setup

File name copying made easy - turn Windows files into text

Need to make lists of files quickly and accurately?

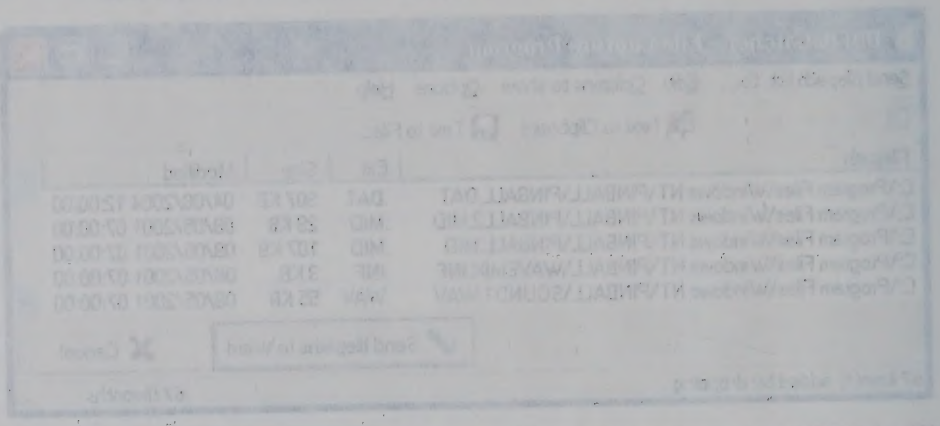
- Copy file names to Microsoft Word - click a menu in Word and list the files in a table
- Copy file names to Microsoft Excel - click a menu in Excel and list the files
- Copy file names for one file, all the files in a folder, or from several folders at once
- Copy file names to a text file
- Copy thousands of file names from searches in Windows Explorer - no need to learn a new program

Never mistype a filepath again. Accurately list files needed for your job. DDFileCatcher looks like this. Just drag and drop files onto DDFileCatcher to turn them into text.



DDFileCatcher is a user-friendly file listing utility used to copy file names from Windows Explorer as text. It can be launched from Microsoft Word or Excel and put the file paths in a Word table or Excel spreadsheet. As a stand alone program, the file paths can be put in the Clipboard and pasted to anywhere you need them, such as an e-mail, a dialog or the source code of a computer program. Select files in a folder and drop or paste them onto DDFileCatcher as in this screencast.

In conclusion DDFileCatcher has found a niche market that no one else has taken advantage of. The really good news is not that they have found this niche, but how much thought they have put into the program. The options are really well thought out, and DDFileCatcher is extremely easy to use. A Real Winner! Try It! Buy It! Shreveport Jumbos 25-star review

Thanks! You are right, there are many, many utilities out there. It's just not easy to find simple, elegant and easy to use. DDFileCatcher is certainly one of the best. Regards, Alex

It really makes my data analysis work much easier when I have to copy a list of several hundred word documents over to another document. Sincerely, James

When you're writing a document, and you want to include one or more file paths for files or directories on a computer, it's time consuming and error prone to type them by hand. For example: "C:\Documents and Settings\Administrator\Main\Programs\Internet Explorer.lnk". With DDFileCatcher, you just drag and drop them and turn them into text. Then click the "Text to Clipboard" button and the files can be pasted straight into any document or application.

- Copy file names from searches applying advanced filters in Windows Explorer
- Select which files you want to convert to file paths from anywhere on your computer
- Copy file names or print all the files in a folder - just drop onto DDFileCatcher, send them to Microsoft Word and paste them out
- Listing files in a directory - Select the files you want and drag them to DDFileCatcher. List files from multiple folders and put them in a report
- Catch files, folders and shortcuts and turn them into text file paths.
- Automatically put file paths in a table in Microsoft Word or Excel or Notepad
- Copy paths to the Clipboard and paste into documents computer code, setup programs, emails.

- Lists complete file paths or folders names and file names in each folder.

- No time-consuming navigating to folders - just drag and drop from Windows Explorer

Other utility programs seem to need lots of settings to find the files. Why duplicate Windows Explorer? DDFileCatcher uses Windows Explorer as it's front end. You've probably got Windows Explorer open anyway. Also, what if you don't want to print all the file names in a folder, but want to remove some. With DDFileCatcher, just select them all and then edit the list when it's in DDFileCatcher before pasting it into a document.

How do I put file information in a Word table? If you want the file extension, size and date and paste it into Word, it would be time consuming to put make a table out of it. DDFileCatcher can be launched from Microsoft Word and put the information in a table. It will even recognize an existing table and add the same file information to the end of it.

Convert Windows files to text. Converting files to text - Drag drop or copy files, folders or shortcuts and display their long filenames. Get filepaths.

Saving the result of searches - Perform a search with Windows Explorer, select the file using Ctrl-Alt, copy or drag them to DDFileCatcher then save them to a text file.

DDFileCatcher ignores duplicate files dropped onto it and can sort them alphabetically.

DDFileCatcher lists either full filepaths or folders followed by a list of files in the folder.

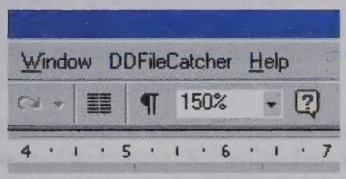
How to make a list of Windows files in Microsoft Word using DDFileCatcher

DDFileCatcher is file listing program, which takes lists of Windows Explorer files and turns them into text and puts them in Microsoft Word. For example, copy from Windows Explorer to Word the results of file searches.

People often ask "how do I print a list of files". Probably the most flexible way to print in from a Word processor, such as Microsoft Word. DDFileCatcher works with Word to make filepath lists in several formats. It installs a file called an add-in in the Microsoft Word startup folder. When Word starts, it loads this file and inserts a menu, called "DDFileCatcher". The menu appears to the left of the "Help" menu.



Watch how DDFileCatcher makes a table in Microsoft Word and fills it with file names and other file information. Click here.

The menu descriptions are listed below.

Full Filepaths Clicking "Full Filepaths" will launch DDFileCatcher. Drag and drop any number of files from Windows Explorer onto DDFileCatcher to turn them into filenames. After files have been dropped onto it from Windows Explorer, My Computer, or The Desktop, the files will be returned to Word and will be listed as full filepaths with one per row. Full filepaths are usually long, so it is possible that they will be word-wrapped if the page width is too small for them. Another animated demo showing how to list full filepaths from Windows Explorer in Word shows how it's done.

A typical full filepath is C:\Program Files\DDFileCatcher\ddfc20.exe

This is made up of the drive (C:), folder (\Program Files\DDFileCatcher\), the file name (ddfc20), and the extension (.exe).

Folders then Filenames Sometimes you might just want to list the filenames in a folder without including the full path for each file. The "folders then filenames" option puts file information in Microsoft Word with the folder containing the files on a line followed by the filenames of the files in the folder on lines beneath it. For example:

C:\Program Files\DDFileCatcher\Help\
DDFileCatcher.cnt
DDFILECATCHER.HLP
DDFileCatcherWordHelp.cnt

Files can be dropped onto DDFileCatcher for several folders, and the list printed in Word will be in the form shown above.

Put Files in a Table To put the files in a table in Microsoft Word, check this menu item before launching DDFileCatcher. If the text cursor in Word is in a table of file information previously made by DDFileCatcher, DDFileCatcher will be launched an will display the same columns as are in the Word table. For example, this could be filename and file date only. Please see this animated demo showing how to make a Word table with folders and filenames

Settings... To put headings above each column of file information, check the "First Row of Table has Headings" checkbox. The headings used can be the default English headings of "Filepath", "Extension", "Size" and "Date", or if the "Use Custom Headings" checkbox is checked, any text can be used for the headings. The headings, such as "Extension" will only appear if that column has been selected in DDFileCatcher for display (when DDFileCatcher is launched).
